Since 2008, the caBIG® Knowledge Centers have served as a vital source of support and information for those deploying caBIG®. The Knowledge Center wiki sites have been an important resource in these efforts, containing the most up-to-date knowledge about caBIG® capabilities, and access to supported tools.

Alongside the Knowledge Center wikis, the NCI Wiki has also grown in use, and is now frequently used for caBIG® program and workspace products. Over time, the Knowledge Center wikis and the NCI wiki have come to hold overlapping content, which has led to community feedback that streamlining of the various caBIG® websites would help people find things more easily. In response to this feedback, we have taken steps to streamline the caBIG® Community Website, the traditional entry point for Community members. Now, we are taking the next step of consolidating our wiki platforms to bring us together on the main NCI platform.

Over the coming weeks, the content on the Knowledge Center wiki content on this site will be moving to the NCI Wiki. We will be moving one Knowledge Center at a time, using a systematic approach that includes confirming that existing content has been moved successfully, integrating that content with existing content, and updating links to the migrated sites across the caBIG® web ecosystem. Additionally, we will be sending messages to workspaces and other groups as specific Knowledge Centers complete the migration process, and providing links to the migrated page from the original site.

If you use the Knowledge Centers, there is no immediate action needed. You will see updates on workspace listservs as specific Knowledge Centers are migrated, and you will encounter updated links whenever you visit the Knowledge Center wiki pages after they have moved. If you would like to preview the look and feel you will experience after the move, visit https://wiki.nci.nih.gov.
